About the Keynote Speaker: Chris Lambert, Executive Director, Life Remodeled

Chris thought seeking a marketing degree while living the frat life at Indiana University might lead him to law school and later to a career as a land developer. Boy, was he off! During his junior year, a spiritual awakening led to Bible studies replacing beer bong. Then a call to Fuller and Gordon-Conwell seminaries, where he earned his M.Div. and doctorate in preaching. For seven months in 2007, he and his wife helped a Liberian village raise needed resources for a well, farm animals and a new school building. That experience cemented his passion for community development. Upon returning to the U.S., he founded a church called Ekklesia. In 2010, he started Life Remodeled, loosely based on the TV show "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition." After three years of projects centered on building houses from the ground up in six days that were deeded to deserving families, Lambert partnered with the Detroit Public Schools to refocus Life Remodeled's efforts on under-resourced high schools and their surrounding neighborhoods, evolving into a transformative citywide community rebuilding initiative. In the last three summers, Life Remodeled has attracted more than 30,000 volunteers from business, community and church organizations to set the groundwork for sustainable change in three Detroit neighborhoods, each focused on bettering the public high school and creating safe passages for attending students. Maybe that land development career wasn't so far off after all.
